HEAD OF SCHOOL'S NOTE

What an unpredictable week this has been with the weather! Usually London escapes relatively unscathed when there is the odd flurry of snow, so for a lot of our pupils the heavy snowfall will be a first. The school has done well to stay open and that is largely thanks to the dedication of the Belham team; firstly in ensuring that the premises are safe, and secondly braving the hazardous conditions to actually get here in the first place! Unfortunately it is looking very likely that we will have to close our doors tomorrow but there are still many opportunities for your child to learn even though they aren't in the classroom. They can find out how snow is formed here; they can keep up to date with the latest BBC Newsround snow reports; or they could even conduct their own winter themed science experiments. Or they could just go outside and enjoy the snow while it lasts! Remember to keep warm and safe.

PARENTS' EVENINGS

As you know, we have had to reschedule our Parents' Evenings this week due to the weather conditions – moving them to next Wednesday and Thursday instead. If you are unable to make the same time slot on the relevant day next week please contact the office.
